Organised by the General Administration of Sport of China once every four years, the National Games (NG) of the People's Republic of China is the nation's highest level and largest national multi-sports event with provinces, autonomous regions, municipalities and special administrative regions, etc. as the participating units. The NG, featuring basically the same competition events as the Olympics with the exception of wushu, aims to nurture budding athletes and select sports talent for representing the country at the Olympics.
